Required New York State Infection Control Training for Residents/Fellows
St. Luke's Roosevelt Hospital Center

New York State's Department of Health's Infection Control Training Law has been amended to now require that all house staff be trained in Infection Control and Barrier Precautions per change in NYS DOH regulation effective November 3, 2008. All incoming residents/fellows will be given the opportunity to take the required NYS DOH Infection Control training online. There is no charge to the resident/fellow for this training. If an incoming house officer has already received Infection Control certification, he/she must provide proof of such training to their program coordinator.

Instructions for taking the course online will be included with contract packages sent to incoming house staff in April 2011.
